

ABSTRACT

A radio operated communication terminal includes at least two housing parts which can move in relation to each other. The housing parts move by means of miniature motors. As a result, it is possible to use the constructive configuration thereof for haptic output of events.